THE basis of the present collection of Historical Tracts was a group of State pamphlets in forty volumes, gathered by Sir John Bramston, M.P. (1611-1700), Chairman of Committees in the House of Commons in the early years of Charles II.'s reign. The Autobiography of Sir John Bramston was printed by the Camden Society in 1845. The collection as it now stands is rich in Civil War and Commonwealth Tracts. It represents vividly the conflict of opinion at the Restoration and at the Revolution of 1688. The military conflicts, political intrigues, and theological controversies which marked the reigns of William III. and Queen Anne are thrown into relief by many rare and forgotten brochures. The civil and religious struggles for liberty and toleration which took place in the Georgian Era are reflected as in a mirror by many curious manifestoes. The whole collection illustrates the growth of opinion in matters religious, political, literary, and social, from the days of Queen Elizabeth to the dawn of the nineteenth century.

5. A Letter from a Free-Holder to the rest of the Free-Holders of England who have Votes in the Choice of Parliament-Men.
6. A Short Account of the Authorities in Law upon which Judgement was given in Sir Edward Hales his case. By Sir Edward Herbert, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas.

Sir Edward Herbert. Educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford. Called at the Middle Temple, Attorney-General in Ireland, but in 1685 succeeded Jeffreys as Chief Justice. At the Revolution followed James II. into exile, and was excepted from the Act of Indemnity passed by William and Mary, and died at Paris in 1698.

Sir Edward Hales was a gentleman of Kent who concealed his submission to Rome, but on the accession of James II. publicly acknowledged his change of conviction. He sought to free himself from the penalty which he had incurred by holding a commission in the army without taking the Sacrament, and sheltered himself behind the King's authority. Sir Edward Herbert delivered judgment in favour of the dispensing power of the King. Hales was afterwards Lieutenant of the Tower, and when the Seven Bishops were imprisoned treated them harshly, and was dismissed in deference to popular clamour. He accompanied James in his flight, was captured and impeached as a traitor, but after a short captivity in the Tower was released in 1690.

7. A Letter writ by Heer Fagel, Pensioner to the Great and Mighty Lords, and the States of Holland and Westfriesland. Writ in French on the 9th April, N. Stile 1688, to the Marquis of Albeville. . . .

Gaspar Fagel (1629-1688). Dutch statesman, and one of the most active enemies of the policy of Louis XIV. He strongly advocated the claims of William of Orange to the English throne, and was closely associated in the scheme which led to the downfall of James II.

8. A Letter writ by Heer Fagel, Pensioner of Holland to M<sup>r</sup> James Stewart, giving an Account of the Prince and Princess of Orange's Thoughts concerning the Repeal of the Test, and the Penal Laws (Nov. 4, 1687).

VOLUME CCXI

I. Memoirs of what past in Christendom from the War begun 1672 to the Peace concluded 1679. [Sir William Temple.]

Sir William Temple, M.P. (1628-1699). Educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. Travelled widely abroad, and was employed in negotiating the Triple Alliance between England, Sweden, and Holland. Became Resident Minister at the Hague, and helped to bring about the marriage in 1677 of Mary, eldest daughter of James Duke of York, with the Prince of Orange. After an interval of retirement, Temple returned to Holland as Ambassador to the States-General. In 1679 he was appointed Secretary of State, but in the following year he retired and spent the rest of his life in literary work at Moor Park, Surrey, where Swift for a time was his private secretary. Dr. Johnson, with a touch of exaggeration, declared that Temple gave cadence to English prose, whilst Swift, who was certainly more entitled to such a compliment himself, declared that his old patron had brought English style to perfection. Hume, Hallam, and Charles Lamb, though in less ecstatic terms, paid tribute to Temple's mastery of prose.

I. Memorials of Affairs of State, during the Latter End of the Reign of King William III [Dispatches between M<sup>r</sup> Secretary Vernon and the Earl of Manchester]. [Printed 1730.]

James Vernon, M.P. Appointed in 1697, through the influence of Shrewsbury, Secretary of State. Ranke calls him a pliant Whig, and he certainly was supple in William's hands. On the accession of Anne he fell from power. His correspondence, with the title of 'The Vernon Papers, 1696-1708,' was edited by G. P. R. James, 3 vols., 1841.

Charles Montagu, third Earl and first Duke of Manchester. At the Revolution he took sides with William of Orange, and was with him through the Irish campaign. He was sent first as Ambassador to Venice, and afterwards as Envoy to Paris. He sent William tidings of the proclamation at the French Court of 'James III.' as King of England, and was instantly recalled. He afterwards became Secretary of State, but on the accession of Anne was dismissed. Created Duke 1719. Died 1722.

1. The Plain Truth: or, An Answer to M<sup>r</sup> Withers his Defence &c. Wherein the Jesuitism and Donatism of the Dissenters is laid open. By John Agate. In 3 pts, with Postscript to M<sup>r</sup> Withers.

The Rev. John Withers, Presbyterian Divine. Author of 'History of Resistance as Practised by the Church of England 1710.'

2. The Nature, Guilt and Danger of Presumptuous Sins, set forth in a Sermon, preach'd before the University of Oxford. By Henry Sacheverell.

Henry Sacheverell, D.D. (1672-1724). Educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he became tutor. Took Orders, and in 1705 obtained the living of St. Saviour's, Southwark. Four years later he preached his two memorable sermons—one at Derby and the other in St. Paul's Cathedral. In them he advocated, as an uncompromising Tory, the duty of non-resistance. This so incensed the Whigs, who were then in power, that they brought him to trial for publishing scandalous and seditious libels. Dr. Sacheverell was suspended for three years, and his sermons were burnt by the common hangman. Terrible riots ensued, as well as a violent controversy by pamphlets, and the result was that the Whigs were turned out of office. The silenced preacher, though quite unworthy of such an honour, was looked upon by the populace as a hero and a martyr. Dr. Sacheverell in his closing days was rector of St. Andrew's, Holborn.

3. The Nature and Mischief of Prejudice and Partiality stated in a Sermon at Oxford March 9th 170 $\frac{3}{4}$ . By Henry Sacheverell.

5. The Mischief of Separation. A Sermon preach'd at Guild-Hall Chapel before the Lord Mayor. By Edward Stillingfleet.

Edward Stillingfleet, D.D. (1635-1699). Educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. Took Orders, and after holding various preferments became preacher at the Rolls Chapel, and lecturer at the Temple, and Chaplain-in-Ordinary to Charles II.; Dean of St. Paul's, on promotion of Sancroft to the Primacy. Stillingfleet declined to take part in the Ecclesiastical Commission revived by James II., which he openly condemned, and on the accession of William III. he was raised to the see of Worcester. He was an acute controversialist, but a man of gentle temper and beautiful life. His chief work was 'Origines Sacrae.' He was engaged in controversies with three sets of disputants—the philosophic school of thinkers represented by Locke, the Puritans represented by Owen, Baxter, and Hull, and the Catholics, who assumed the aggressive under James II.

6. The Communication of Sin. A
Sermon preach'd at the Assizes held at Derby.
By Henry Sacheverell.

1. The Election-Dialogue, between a Gentleman and his Neighbour in the Country, concerning the Choice of Good Members.

[By Benj. Hoadly.]

Benjamin Hoadley, D.D. (1676–1761). Educated at Catherine Hall, Cambridge, where he obtained a Fellowship, took Orders, and in 1704 was appointed Rector of St. Peter's Church, Broad Street, London. He became renowned for his skill in controversy, both ecclesiastical and political, and his name will always be associated with the Bangorian controversy respecting the spiritual authority of the Church of England. He publicly discussed with Calamy the reasonableness of conformity, and protested against Atterbury's views in regard to the doctrine of non-resistance. He was a favourite at Court, and Queen Anne presented him to the living of Streatham, and on the accession of George I. he was raised to the see of Bangor—a diocese which he never visited. He held in succession the sees of Hereford 1721, Salisbury 1723, and Winchester 1734.

3. Lewis Baboon Turned Honest, and John Bull Politician. Being the Fourth Part of Law is a Bottomless-Pit.

Constantly attributed to Swift, but there seems no doubt now that Dr. John Arbuthnot (1675-1735) was the writer. Arbuthnot was Physician to Queen Anne and an intimate friend of Pope and Swift. The effect of the satire was startling. It turned the public mind from the victories of the war, and by placing before the people questions which directly touched their pockets made them clamour for the conclusion of peace.

I. The Importance of Dunkirk Consider'd : in Defence of the Guardian of August 7th. By M<sup>r</sup> Steele. Third edition.

Sir Richard Steele (1671-1729). Essayist and dramatic writer. Educated at the Charterhouse and at Oxford. Obtained a commission in the Guards and wrote 'The Christian Hero,' which he dedicated to Lord Cutts—Salamander Cutts, Marlborough's famous lieutenant—who appointed him his secretary and got him a captain's commission in the Fusiliers. In 1709 Steele, with the assistance of Addison, established the 'Tatler;' he had previously won renown as a playwright. There is no need here to speak of the 'Spectator' or the 'Guardian,' in both of which literary adventures Steele had Addison for his collaborator. In 1709 he entered Parliament, from which he was expelled because of his pamphlets, 'The Englishman' and 'The Crisis.' On the accession of George I. he was knighted and re-elected to Parliament, and on the suppression of the Jacobite Rebellion in 1715 was appointed one of the Commissioners of Forfeited Estates in Scotland. In 1722 his play, 'The Conscious Lovers,' was acted with great success, but shortly afterwards a paralytic seizure compelled him to abandon his political projects and literary work, and he died at Carmarthen. The first edition of this important pamphlet was published on September 22, 1713.

VOLUME CCCLIII

I. Memoirs of the Life and Conduct of Dr Francis Atterbury, late Bishop of Rochester, from his Birth to his Banishment. Address'd to the Rt. Hon. William Pulteney Esq.

Francis Atterbury, D.D. (1662-1732). Educated at Westminster and Christ Church, Oxford. Took Orders, and became distinguished both as a preacher and a classical scholar. Lord High Almoner to William III. In the reign of Anne took the part of Dr. Sacheverell, and opposed Hoadley, Burnet, and Wake in the ecclesiastical controversies of that age. In 1713 obtained the twofold appointment of Dean of Westminster and Bishop of Rochester, and was about to be raised to the See of Canterbury when the death of Queen Anne hindered his promotion.

Historical Tracts, 1561-1800 405.

A strong adherent of the Stuarts, Atterbury was sent to the Tower in 1722 on the charge of conspiracy, with the result that the closing years of his life were spent in exile. There are allusions to him in the writings of Pope and Swift, with both of whom he was intimate.

2. A Discoverie of Certaine Errours published in Print in the much commended Britannia, 1594, very prejudiciall to the Discences and Successions of the auncient Nobilitie of this Realme. By Ralphe Brooke. With Mr Camden's Answer to this Book.

VOLUME CCCLIV

1. A Church of England-Man's Reasons for Taking the Oaths to His Present Majesty King George.

2. The True Nature of Imposture fully Display'd in the Life of Mahomet. With a Discourse annex'd for the Vindication of Christianity from this Charge. . . . By Humphrey Prideaux, D.D. Dean of Norwich. 8th edition. 260 pp.

Humphrey Prideaux, D.D. (1648-1724). Educated at Westminster and Christ Church, Oxford. Took Orders, and rose eventually to be Dean of Norwich early in the reign of Anne. Wrote in defence of the validity of Orders in the Church of England against the Roman Catholics. Chiefly remembered now by his 'Connection of the History of the Old and New Testaments.' Bequeathed a large collection of books to Clare College, Cambridge. This 'Life of of Mahomet' is altogether too sweeping in its strictures.

3. An Essay upon Gospel and Legal Preaching. By a Minister of the Church of Scotland.

4. A Sermon preach'd upon Thursday April 25, 1723, being a Day appointed for Solemn Thanksgiving . . . for averting . . . the Dreadful Scourge of the Pestilence. By William M<sup>c</sup>George.

The 'Weekly Journal' or 'Saturday's Post' was a Tory organ published by Nicholas Mist, in which Defoe, though a Whig, wrote for a time anonymously with Lord Sunderland's approbation.

6. An Essay upon the Civil Wars of France, and also upon the Epick Poetry of the European Nations. By Voltaire.

François Marie Arouet de Voltaire (1694-1778). French poet, historian, and philosopher. One of the great masters of French literature, and perhaps the most brilliant iconoclast of the eighteenth century, in whom the revolutionary aspirations of that age found their foremost and most fearless exponent. Great force of character, wide range of ability and knowledge, immense powers of work and a terrible gift of sarcasm, were united in him with a spirit of revolt and a moral courage which served him well in attack. His works fill seventy volumes, and his career was as full of dramatic incidents as his character was full of surprises.

4. Walsingham's Manual, or, Prudential Maxims for Statesmen and Courtiers: with Instructions for Youth, Gentlemen, and Noblemen. By Sir Walter Raleigh, Lord

Treasurer Burleigh, and Cardinal Sermonetta.
2nd edition.

Sir Francis Walsingham is supposed to have been born at the Manor House, Chislehurst, Kent, the home of Mrs. Peter Redpath, the donor of these 'Historical Tracts' (1530-1590). Walsingham, one of the great statesmen of Elizabeth's reign, united a 'fidelity, diligence, and caution' in public affairs. He exerted himself to obtain toleration for the Puritans, and he prevented a quarrel between Elizabeth and her successor. It was said of him that his conversation was insinuating and reserved; he saw every man and none saw him. Walsingham was always in favour of the colonial expansion of England.

5. The Duty of Praying for our Superiors Consider'd, in Remarks on M<sup>r</sup> Patrick Cockburn's Printed Sermon.

1. Oratory Transactions. No. I. To be occasionally publish'd. By J. Henley M.A. . . . [Also] Plan of the Oratory (1726).

1728

John Henley (1692-1756), commonly called Orator Henley. Educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. Took Orders. Chilled by lack of preferment, he commenced the delivery in London of orations on theology, politics, society and the like, and these appearances he continued for nearly thirty years, until he became one of the most talked of people in the town. Pope scoffed at him in the 'Dunciad' and Hogarth satirised him in his cartoons. He published sermons, poems, letters, translations, and at one time edited a weekly paper.

1732 (4)

1. An Account of several Work-Houses for employing and Maintaining the Poor. . . . Second edition.

2. The Posthumous Works of Mr Samuel Butler . . . written in the time of the Grand Rebellion. Fourth edition.

Samuel Butler (1612-1680). Educated at Cambridge. Held positions in the household, first of Elizabeth, Countess of Kent, where he made the acquaintance of John Selden, and afterwards in that of Sir Samuel Luke, one of Cromwell's commanders. The latter is said to be the original of 'Hudibras,' a coarse but clever satire of the Presbyterians and Independents, the first part of which appeared in 1663 and the last in 1678. Hallam asserts that 'Hudibras' was 'incomparably more popular at the time of its publication than "Paradise Lost."' Passages from it were often on the lips of Charles II., who was always glad to banter at the Puritans.

3. A Collection of Pieces in Verse and Prose which have been published on Occasion of the Dunciad. Dedicated to the Earl of Middlesex by M<sup>r</sup> Savage.

Richard Savage (1698-1743). Illegitimate son of Earl Rivers; a poet, the story of whose life has been told by Dr. Johnson in a classic short biography. Author of the tragedy of 'Sir Thomas Overbury' (1723), 'The Wanderer' (1729), and other now forgotten poems. Johnson's biography was first published in 1744, and afterwards found a place in his 'Lives of the English Poets.' Savage's life was one of misery and recklessness, and he died in the Debtors' Prison at Bristol.

4. Of the Use of Riches. An Epistle to Lord Bathurst.

5. Of Taste. An Epistle to the Earl of Burlington. By M<sup>r</sup> Pope.

Alexander Pope (1688-1744). Son of a wealthy London linendraper, and born in Lombard Street, E.C. His parents were Roman Catholics, and Pope was privately educated by a priest, but was never in any real sense a scholar, in spite of his wide acquaintance with English literature. 'Voltaire declared that Pope could hardly read or speak a word of French, and his knowledge of Greek would have satisfied Bentley as little as his French satisfied

Voltaire.' He wrote his 'Pastorals' at sixteen, and his 'Essay on Criticism' at twenty-three, and in rapid succession 'The Ode on Cecilia's Day,' 'The Rape of the Lock,' 'Eloisa to Abelard,' 'Windsor Forest,' and other poems. He then undertook to publish his translation of the 'Iliad' by subscription, and the result brought him fortune as well as fame, the six volumes of which were published between 1715 and 1720. In 1718 he purchased his villa at Twickenham, his home for the last twenty-five years of his life. The 'Iliad' was followed by a translation of 'The Odyssey' and that in turn by his mock heroic poem 'The Dunciad' (1727)—a pillory for people who had given him offence. It was followed by 'The Essay on Man,' written at the suggestion of Lord Bolingbroke, by the 'Moral Epistles,' and the 'Letters.'

VOLUME CCCXCI

I. A Memorial for the People of Scotland, or Some Brief Animadversions on the Infamous Act of the British Parliament, unjustly imposed on the Ministers and People in this Land, on 7th August 1737. With a brief account of the Life of John Porteous. 1737

John Porteous, Captain of the City Guard of Edinburgh, whose name lives in history in connection with the Porteous riots. He was in command of the Guard at the execution of a notorious smuggler in Edinburgh, in April 1736. The criminal had won the sympathies of the crowd by planning the successful escape of a fellow-prisoner. After the execution the mob attacked the authorities, and Captain Porteous lost his self-control and ordered his soldiers to fire on the people, which they did with deadly effect. He was tried, found guilty of murder, and sentenced to death, but the Government intervened with a reprieve. The Edinburgh people were greatly incensed at such clemency, and on September 7, 1736, the day originally appointed for his execution, they seized Porteous at the Tolbooth and hung him in the Grass Market. Sir Walter Scott has dealt inimitably with the subject in 'The Heart of Midlothian.'

8. An Account of Money Received and Disbursed for the Orphan-House in Georgia. By George Whitefield A.B. To which is prefixed a plan of the building.

George Whitefield, M.A. (1714-1770). Son of an innkeeper at Bristol. Educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, where he became one of a group of young men who were scoffingly called 'Methodists.' He was ordained at twenty-one by the Bishop of Gloucester, and after holding for a short time a curacy in London, found his true vocation as a travelling evangelist and field-preacher. He lived in the dull Georgian era when Arianism was fashionable and formalism and apathy prevailed; and no man except John Wesley did more to create the Evangelical revival and to bring about a reformation of morals. Whitefield was a mystic with a passion for hard work, who did not so much possess religion as was possessed by it. He was a great orator with high dramatic instincts, but his strength lay in his vision of unseen realities and in the wistful compassion which made his tender appeals resistless. He believed in lifting up as well as in looking up, and, like C. H. Spurgeon, was a princely and sagacious philanthropist as well as an acknowledged master of assemblies. He crossed the Atlantic seven times before the age of steam, in order, as he put it, to preach in 'ungospelised wilds,' and it is not too much to say, by his missionary labours and his care of orphan children, he made the Anglo-Saxon race his debtors. He died at fifty-six after thirty years of ceaseless labour, and the end found him as he had always wished, in harness.

9. The Court-Secret: A Melancholy Truth. Now first translated from the Original Arabic.

VOLUME CCCXCIX

I. The History of Francis-Eugene Prince of Savoy. . . . By an English Officer.

François Eugène of Savoy (1663-1736). Grandson of the Duke of Savoy. The vocation chosen for him was the Church. Louis XIV. always spoke of him as the 'Little Priest.' Full of military ardour, Prince Eugène, when refused a commission in the French Army, entered the service of the Emperor Leopold as a volunteer against the Turks, and by his courage and ability rapidly rose in rank. In the Coalition War Louis XIV. had good reason to regret the indignity he had put upon Prince Eugène, and he offered him a Marshal's bâton and a pension if he would come to the help of his native land, but both offers were declined. The part which he played in the War of the Spanish Succession is a matter of history, and he, quite as much as Marlborough, gained the brilliant victories of Blenheim (1704), Oudenarde (1708), and Malplaquet (1709). Bishop Hare, who accompanied Marlborough as Chaplain-General through his campaigns, said in his unpublished journal—it is amongst the literary archives of Blenheim Palace—that it was easier for Prince Eugène to do great things than talk about them.

opinions, the nature of which is in part revealed by his protest against Establishments in religion as inconsistent with the New Testament. He founded in 1728 the sect at first called Glassites. Their doctrines were expanded by his son-in-law and successor, Robert Sandeman (1718-1771), who revived certain customs of the primitive Church. The sect now called the Sandemanians established itself both in England and the United States, but is now almost extinct. Its most distinguished adherent in the last century was the illustrious chemist Professor Michael Faraday, F.R.S. (1791-1867).

4. Letters of the Honourable Algernon Sydney to the Honourable Henry Savile in the year 1679 &c.

Algernon Sidney (1620-1683). Second son of Robert, Earl of Leicester, English patriot. Adopted a military career, and won his spurs in the Irish Rebellion under his brother, Philip Sidney, Lord Lisle. Took the side of the Commons in the Civil War, and in several actions was distinguished for valour. Vindicated the execution of Charles I.; but during the Commonwealth retired to Penshurst, where he wrote his 'Discourses on Government.' In 1659 was sent as a Commissioner to mediate between Denmark and Sweden, and, the Restoration taking place in the following year, he remained abroad till 1677, when he received a pardon and returned. He was charged with Lord William Russell in 1683 with complicity in the so-called Rye-House Plot, and, though the evidence against him was inconclusive, he was sentenced by Judge Jeffreys to death and executed on Tower Hill December 7, 1683. His last words on the scaffold are here recovered from a contemporary pamphlet : 'The Lord sanctify these Sufferings to me, and, though I fall as a sacrifice unto Idols, suffer not Idolatry to be established in this land. Bless Thy People and save them. Defend Thy own Cause, and Defend those that Defend it. Stir up such as are Faint, Direct those that are Willing, Confirm those that Waver, Give wisdom and integrity unto all. Order all Things so as may most redound unto Thine own Glory. Grant that I may Die glorifying Thee for all Thine Mercies.'

Henry Savile (1642-1687). Brother of the first Marquis of Halifax. Educated at Christ Church, Oxford. M.P. for Newark. Vice-Chamberlain to Charles II. and James II., and Ambassador to France, where he died, 1687.

Conyers Middleton, D.D. (1683-1750). Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became Fellow. Took Orders, and in 1722 became Chief Librarian of the Public Library at Cambridge. In later years held the living of Hascomb in Surrey. His literary reputation rests chiefly on his famous 'Life of Cicero,' a book which brought him substantial reward. He also wrote a book on Miracles. He was all his life a quarrelsome scholar, as his controversies with Bentley, Hook, and others show. The title of the pamphlet alluded to is 'A Letter from Rome showing an Exact Conformity between Popery and Paganism; or, the Religion of the present Romans derived from that of their Heathen Ancestors.' It was first published in 1729 and went through several editions.

I. Remarks on Several Occasional Reflections: In Answer to the Rev. D<sup>r</sup> Middleton, D<sup>r</sup> Pococke, the Master of the Charter House, D<sup>r</sup> Richard Grey, and others. Serving to Explain and Justify divers Passages in the Divine Legation. . . . By M<sup>r</sup> Warburton. (2 parts, 173 and 250 pp.)

William Warburton, D.D. (1698-1779). In early life practised as an attorney at Newark, but took Orders in 1723, and after holding minor appointments became Dean of Bristol (1757), Bishop of Gloucester (1759), and was also Chaplain-in-Ordinary to George II. His chief writings are 'The Alliance between Church and State; or, the Necessity and Equity of an Established Religion and Test Law,' a book which passed through several editions, but which gave satisfaction neither to Anglicans nor Nonconformists; but still more celebrated is 'The Divine Legation of Moses demonstrated on the Principles of a Religious Deist,' a book which made as great a sensation in its day in theological circles as Seeley's 'Ecce Homo,' or Renan's 'Vie de Jésus.' Lord Jeffrey described it as the most learned and the most arrogant book of the century; and Dr. Johnson, whilst admitting that Warburton possessed the powers of the scholar, the reasoner, and the wit, laid stress on his vehemence and the manner in which he treated his adversaries with contemptuous superiority.

4. The Free-Holder, or Political Essays. By the Rt. Hon. Joseph Addison Esq. Seventh edition.

Joseph Addison (1672-1719). Educated at the Charterhouse and Magdalen College, Oxford. After leaving Oxford, Addison became acquainted first with the Earl of Halifax and then with Lord Somers, and through the influence of the latter received a pension of 300*l*. It was his poem 'The Campaign,' written in 1704, just after the battle of Blenheim, at the suggestion of Lord Godolphin, that brought him into reputation, and in 1708 he entered Parliament and was appointed Under-Secretary of State. In the same year, Lord Wharton, then Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, appointed him his Chief Secretary, and whilst in Ireland Addison wrote his contributions to

Historical Tracts, 1561-1800 487

'The Tatler,' a periodical which his old friend Richard Steele had just started. On the fall of the Whigs in 1710, Addison, thrown out of office, gave himself more exclusively to literature, and wrote some strong party articles in the Whig 'Examiner.' In March 1711 the 'Spectator' was started by Steele and himself, and from that time to December 1714, when it ceased, Addison held the chief place of honour in its pages. His tragedy of 'Cato' was put on the stage in 1713, and, as it appealed to party feeling, which at the moment ran high, it was a dramatic triumph. On the accession of George I. Addison again became Chief Secretary in Ireland, and in 1715 published 'The Freeholder,' perhaps the most important of his political writings. The first number was issued on December 23, 1715; it ran to fifty-five, the last of which appeared on June 29, 1716. It was a defence of the Hanoverian succession against the Jacobites, who were then plotting to overthrow George I. In 1716, Addison, who had been further rewarded for his political services, married the Dowager Countess of Warwick, and in 1717 became Secretary of State. A year later, in failing health and with embittered temper—his marriage was unhappy—he quitted office with a pension of 1,500*l.* a year. His last years were further embittered by a quarrel with Steele, whom he attacked in the pages of 'The Old Whig.' He died June 17, 1719, at Holland House, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. He lives in literature as a great literary artist, a master not merely of clear, direct statement, but of humour and all the resources of style.

500 Mrs. Peter Redpath's

Oration at his Interment, By Samuel Chandler.
2nd edition.

Isaac Watts, D.D. (1674-1748). Independent minister, and greatest of English hymn-writers. Born in Southampton, educated in London. In 1696 became tutor in the family of Sir John Hartopp, Stoke Newington. Two years later was chosen assistant to Dr. Chauncey, minister of the Independent Church, Mark Lane, London, whom he succeeded in 1702. His health, always precarious, led him to visit his friend Sir Thomas Abney at Theobalds, Essex, where he remained an honoured guest for thirty-six years, preaching when able, and devoting himself to literary work. Dr. Johnson wrote his life, and in it he says, 'Every man acquainted with the common principles of human action will look with veneration on Watts, who was at one time combating Locke, and at another making a catechism for children in their fourth year. A voluntary descent from the dignity of science is perhaps the hardest lesson that humility can teach.' Dr. Johnson extols in Watts the union of orthodoxy with charity. His 'Logic,' though once a text-book at Oxford, is forgotten, his 'Improvement of the Mind,' though once widely read, is neglected, but the best of his hymns are immortal.

2. The Regicide : or, James I. of Scotland. A Tragedy. By the author of Roderick Random.

Tobias George Smollett, M.D. (1721-1771). Educated at Glasgow. Apprenticed to a surgeon. Accompanied the Expedition to Carthage in 1741 in a medical capacity, an experience which he turned to account in the pages of 'Roderick Random' (1748). Smollett afterwards practised his profession with indifferent success in London and in Bath, and his play 'The Regicide' was offered to Garrick, who, however, was forced to decline it. 'Peregrine Pickle' was written in 1751, 'Count Fathom' in 1753, 'The History of England' in 1758, 'Sir Launcelot Greaves' in 1762, 'Humphrey Clinker' in 1771. Smollett also published his travels and various plays and poems, and stands high in the great succession of eighteenth-century novelists. Thackeray thought 'Humphrey Clinker' the most laughable story that had ever been written since the art of the novel came into existence, and Hazlitt was scarcely less enthusiastic about 'Roderick Random.'

I. The English Pericles ; or, The four Qualifications necessary to make a True Statesman, exemplified in the Character and Conduct of M<sup>r</sup> Secretary Pitt. [c. 1750]

William Pitt, Earl of Chatham (1708-1778). Cornish by birth. The elder Pitt studied at Eton and Oxford, entered the Army, but soon turned aside to politics, becoming at the age of twenty-six M.P. for Old Sarum. He quickly came to the front as an opponent of Sir Robert Walpole, and 'Old Marlborough,' as Horace Walpole called Sarah, Duchess, who hated Sir Robert, bequeathed to Pitt in 1744 a legacy of 10,000*l*. After holding other appointments Pitt became Secretary of State in 1756, and in the Newcastle Cabinet of the following year, which he virtually ruled, he held the same post in spite of the King's hostility to him. On the accession of George III. the jealousy of Lord Bute, who presently became Premier, kept Pitt out of office, but his ascendancy in Parliament and power in the country grew all the more pronounced. He re-entered the Cabinet in the Grafton Ministry (1767), and was raised to the Peerage as Earl of Chatham. During Lord North's Ministry, when tyrannical measures against Wilkes at home and the American colonists abroad were in progress, Chatham was relentless in his attacks. When, however, he realised that the war in America had led the colonists to determine on complete independence, Chatham threw his influence in the opposite scale. He spoke for the last time in Parliament on April 7, 1778, and fell down in a fit. He died on May 11 in that year. His epitaph in Westminster Abbey gathers up his political claims into a phrase when it states that he raised the nation 'to a height of prosperity and glory unknown to any former age.'

4. M<sup>r</sup> Hoyle's Games of Whist, Quadrille, Piquet, Chess and Back-gammon. . . .
16th edition. [c. 1750]

The primitive stage of whist may be roughly said to have extended between the dawn of the sixteenth century and the early Georgian era. Whist is of English origin, but a good deal of obscurity clouds its birth. Before Edmund Hoyle (1672-1769) arose to render it fashionable, it was ignored in polite circles. It came to be the vogue with the growth in the reign of George II. of more or less intellectual coteries at the coffee taverns, which bulk so largely in the literary annals of the eighteenth century. It was winning its way to social recognition with the classes when Dr. Johnson was busy with the 'Rambler,' and there are familiar allusions to it in that journal in 1750, and in the 'Gentleman's Magazine' of 1755. Edmund Hoyle remained the unchallenged autocrat of the whist table from 1730 to 1860, when 'Cavendish' and other philosophical masters arose to turn the pastime into a science precious to the elect.

3. The Case of the Hon. Alex. Murray, Esq; in an Appeal to the People of Great Britain; more particularly the Inhabitants of the City and Liberty of Westminster. (By Paul Whitehead.)

Alexander Murray was a younger son of the fourth Lord Elibank. He was an ardent Jacobite, and was sent to Newgate for his violent conduct at the Westminster Election of 1750. He was a friend of David Hume, lived much abroad, and died in 1777.

4. An Enquiry into the Causes of the late Increase of Robbers &c., with some Proposals for Remedying this Growing Evil.
. . . By Henry Fielding.

Henry Fielding (1707-1754). Born at Sharpham Park, Somersetshire; died at Lisbon, whither he had gone in search of health. He was the son of one of Marlborough's officers, and was educated first at Eton and then at Leyden. In early manhood Fielding wrote with indifferent success for the stage. In 1734 he fell in love with and married a reigning beauty, Miss Charlotte Cradock, who is said to have been the original of Amelia, whom Dr. Johnson called the most pleasing of all the heroines of romance. With his marriage Fielding's circumstances improved, and shortly afterwards he came into possession of about 200*l.* a year through the death of his mother. The young couple retired to the country, but soon ran through their means, and Fielding, on his return to London, had now to choose, as he put it, between being a hackney writer or a hackney coachman, and, as he had a full head as well as an empty pocket, he chose the former. He edited a periodical journal, 'The Champion,' in 1739, was called to the Bar, and oddly enough became manager of the Haymarket Theatre. His great novels—so great that they mark an epoch in the history of fiction—appeared in rapid succession. 'Joseph Andrews' was the first (1742), and was provoked by Fielding's contempt for Richardson's 'Pamela,' which had taken the town by storm in 1740. 'Tom Jones' appeared in 1749 and 'Amelia' in 1751. Fielding meanwhile wrote much as a Whig journalist, and he had previously written twenty-five plays besides other works, notably 'Jonathan Wild.' Sir Walter Scott termed Fielding the first of British novelists. Byron called him the prose Homer of human nature; whilst his great contemporary and rival, Smollett, thought that the genius of Cervantes must have passed into his possession, since he wrote with equal strength and humour.

4. Remarks on Lord Bolingbroke's
Letters on the Study and Use of History : so far as they relate to the History of the Old Testament. . . . By James Hervey A.M.

Henry St. John, Viscount Bolingbroke (1678-1751).
Educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford. Entered Parliament in 1701 and took sides with Harley and the Tories. When the latter became Secretary of State in 1704 St. John was appointed Secretary for War, and the two quitted office together in 1708, only, however, to return in triumph after the Sacheverell episode, which brought the Tories back to power in 1710. St. John was now Secretary of State. Harley was created Earl of Oxford (1711) and St. John Viscount Bolingbroke (1712), and the relations between them were soon strained. Queen Anne dismissed Oxford on July 2, 1714, but Bolingbroke's triumph was short-lived, for the Queen died on August 1. He had intrigued deeply with the Jacobites, and was at heart opposed to the Hanoverian succession. Shrewsbury triumphed at the Council, and Bolingbroke fled to France. In 1723 he was allowed to return, though excluded from the House of Lords, and did his best through political intrigue, of which he was a master, and political journalism, in which he also excelled, to damage Walpole's reputation. He subsequently withdrew again to France, but spent the closing years of his life at his villa in Battersea. His chief works are 'Letters on the Study of History,' 'Remarks on the History of England,' 'A Dissertation upon Parties,' and the 'Idea of a Patriot King.' He was brilliant, able, unscrupulous, and in the end unsuccessful.

Andrew Baxter (1686-1750). Educated at the University of Aberdeen, and became tutor in succession to Lord Grey, Lord Blantyre, and others.

John Wilkes (1727-1797). Entered the House of Commons at the age of thirty as member for Aylesbury, and started a journal called 'The North Briton' in opposition to the Bute Ministry, and in consequence of a gross libel in it was committed to the Tower in 1763. He claimed privilege, and on his release retired to Paris. He was afterwards outlawed for printing an indecent poem. In 1768 he was, however, elected M.P. for Middlesex, but was prevented from taking his seat and sent to prison, a course which resulted in serious riots. He was four times re-elected for Middlesex, his debts were paid by public subscription, and was even chosen Lord Mayor of London. Finally, the Government gave way, and he was permitted to take his seat in Parliament, largely through the eloquence of Burke. So long as he was opposed, he was a dangerous menace, for the cry 'Wilkes and Liberty' appealed to the democracy; but, once admitted to Parliament, his influence rapidly vanished, and he never carried any authority in its debates.

3. The True Church of Christ, which, and where to be found; according to the opinion of the late Judge Burnett. . . .

6. A Letter from Xo Ho, a Chinese Philosopher at London, to his Friend Lienchi at Peking. [By Horace Walpole.]

Horace Walpole, Earl of Orford (1717-1797). Youngest son of Sir Robert Walpole. Educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. After leaving the University travelled abroad with Gray the poet. Entered the House of Commons in 1741, where he was quite out of his element and of little use, a fact which he did not fully recognise, however, till 1768, when he relinquished public life. He succeeded to the earldom in old age (1791) and affected to be annoyed. However that may be, he never took his seat in the House of Lords during the six years of life that remained to him. His chief works were 'The Castle of Otranto,' a clever satire on melodramatic romances of the school of Mrs. Radcliffe which was then in vogue; 'The Mysterious Mother: A Tragedy,' 'Historic Doubts on the Life and Reign of Richard III.,' 'Memoirs of the Reigns of George II. and George III.,' and a vast collection of letters which cover the period 1735-1797 and fill nine volumes. The younger son of the famous Prime Minister, Horace Walpole inherited 5,000*l.* a year. He never married, probably because he was too much in love with himself, but he sat in Parliament for eight and twenty years, mixed freely in Society, and dabbled all his life in literature and art bricks and mortar. He was not a reckless cynic or a heartless coxcomb, but people who only knew him in some of his moods might have mistaken him for either. He amused himself by building Strawberry Hill, a mock Gothic castle, which he filled with bric-à-brac, books, paintings, and curiosities. He also set up a private press and published various books. His reputation rests now almost exclusively on his Letters, in which literary criticism, political intelligence, and Court gossip are blended with vivid sidelights on English society and spiteful but witty comments on the chief personages in it. Sydney Smith thought them the best wit ever published in the shape of Letters. Lord Byron said they were incomparable, whilst a much cooler critic, Sir Walter Scott, thought Walpole the best letter-writer in the English language.

1. A Compleat History of the Rebellion, from its First Rise, in 1745, to its Total Suppression, at the glorious Battle of Culloden, in April 1746. By James Ray.

Ray's 'Rebellion' was reprinted constantly in the eighteenth century. Very little is known about the author except that he lived at Whitehaven, and served as a volunteer in the Duke of Cumberland's Army, and was present at the battle of Culloden. The book gives an accurate and vivid account of the campaign.

2. A Short Review of Mr Hooke's Observations &c. concerning the Roman Senate and the Character of Dionysius of Halicarnassus.

Nathaniel Hooke, died 1763. Barrister. A Roman Catholic of the school of Fénelon, whose biography he translated (1723). His chief work was his 'Roman History' from the building of Rome to the end of the Commonwealth, four volumes, a book which, though now superseded, was in the eighteenth century greatly esteemed. It was Hooke who put into literary shape the famous 'Account of the Conduct of the Dowager Duchess of Marlborough from her first coming to Court to the year 1710,' which was dictated by 'Old Marlborough,' as Horace Walpole called her, shortly before her death. Hooke received 5,000*l.* for the preparation of this short book, but the Duchess promptly quarrelled with him, because she suspected him of an intention to try and convert her to the Catholic faith. Some colour is lent to this by the fact that Hooke brought a priest to the deathbed of Pope, whose death occurred in the same year as that of the Duchess of Marlborough (1744).

VOLUME CCCCLXV

I. An Epistle to the Rt. Hon. Philip Earl of Chesterfield. To which are added Lawson's Obsequies: an Eclogue. By W. Dunkin, D.D.

Philip Dormer Stanhope, fourth Earl of Chesterfield (1694-1773). Educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. Entered the House of Commons, 1715. Succeeded to the peerage in 1726. Ambassador to the Hague, 1728. Paid great court to George II., and in 1744 was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, and two years later became Secretary of State, but resigned office in 1748. His literary reputation turns on his celebrated 'Letters to His Son,' which were first published in 1774. Chesterfield was intimate with Bolingbroke, Walpole, Pulteney, and Pitt, and with Addison, Swift, Pope, Johnson, Montesquieu, and Voltaire in another sphere. His letters are shrewd, elegant, pithy, and bleak. They bear witness, as Mr. Lecky once put it, to the delicate but fastidious taste, the immoral principle, the hard, keen, and worldly wisdom of Chesterfield, whom Dr. Johnson once regarded as a lord among wits, but afterwards discovered to be only a wit among lords.

William Dunkin, D.D. (1709-1765). Irish clergyman and poet. Intimate friend of Dean Swift.

2. Conjectures on Original Composition. In a Letter to the Author of Sir Charles Grandison. (Samuel Richardson.)

3. An Essay towards a General History of Feudal Property in Great Britain. . . .

By John Dalrymple Esq.

Sir John Dalrymple (1726-1810). Fourth baronet. Educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. Called to the Bar, and rose finally to be Baron of the Exchequer. Hume praised this book, which was first published in 1757. This is the fourth edition. Dalrymple entertained Dr. Johnson at Cranstoun during the sage's 'Tour in the Hebrides.' His best-known book is 'Memoirs of Great Britain and Ireland from the Dissolution of the Last Parliament of Charles II. to the Battle of La Hogue,' three volumes (1771).

4. A Treatise on the Law of Descents in Fee-Simple. By William Blackstone.

Sir William Blackstone (1723-1780). Educated at the Charterhouse and at Oxford, where he afterwards became First Vinerian Professor of Law. Judge of the Court of Common Pleas (1770-1780). Author of the classic 'Commentaries on the Laws of England.'

VOLUME CCCCLXVI

I. Reflections on the Rise and Fall of the Antient Republicks. Adapted to the Present State of Great Britain. By E. W. Montagu, Junior, Esq. (384 pp.) (First edition.)

Edward Wortley Montagu (1713-1776). His father was Ambassador to the Porte, and an intimate friend of Addison. His mother was the celebrated Lady Mary Wortley Montagu—the first Englishwoman who used both her eyes and her pen in sparkling 'Letters' from abroad. The younger E. W. Montagu sat in the House of Commons from 1754 to 1762. He was a linguist and a libertine, who led an extraordinary life, finally masquerading as a Turk at Venice.

Right Hon. Charles Townshend (1725-1767). Entered the House of Commons, 1747. Secretary of War, 1761-62. Chancellor of the Exchequer under Chatham, 1766, and in that capacity was responsible, perhaps more than any other statesman, for the armed collision with the North American Colonies. Townshend was a brilliant, restless, and fickle politician, and was known to his contemporaries as the 'Weathercock,' a sobriquet which was fully earned.

3. Gisbal, an Hyperborean Tale : Translated from the Fragments of Ossian the Son of Fingal. (First edition.)

James MacPherson (1738-1796). Educated at the Universities of Aberdeen and Edinburgh with a view to the Presbyterian ministry, but subsequently became first a schoolmaster and next a private tutor. In 1764 MacPherson went to Florida as private secretary to Governor Johnstone, and towards the close of his life sat in Parliament and was agent for the Nabob of Arcot, and helped the North Cabinet with his pen in the prosecution of the war with the American Colonies. The Poems of Ossian, which MacPherson declared he had translated from the Gaelic, were supposed to have been written by a prince of that name and his contemporaries of the third century. It is commonly believed that MacPherson's prose epics were founded on traditional legends which lingered in the Highlands. The Poems of Ossian gave rise to a great literary controversy. Lord Kames, Sir John Sinclair, and Dr. Blair believed in their genuineness; but Dr. Johnson, David Hume, and others held stoutly to the opposite view. Lord Macaulay thinks that Dr. Johnson's indignation was the more pronounced because the poems possessed a 'superficial air of originality' which imposed upon the world. The Highland Society in 1805 issued a report on the matter, and Sir Walter Scott states that the outcome was that there were no real originals for the poems, and that the greater part was a forgery.

2. Letters of the Right Honourable Lady M...y W...y M....e: written during her Travels in Europe, Asia, and Africa, to Persons of Distinction. . . . Three vols. First edition.

Lady Mary Wortley Montagu (1690-1762). Eldest daughter of Evelyn, Duke of Kingston. Quick-witted and attractive, she as a young girl was one of the toasts of the Kit-Cat Club, but married in 1712, against her father's will, Edward Wortley Montagu, M.P., grandson of the first Earl of Sandwich. He was appointed Ambassador to the Porte in 1716, and it was from Constantinople that Lady Mary—almost the first Englishwoman of rank and culture to travel in the East—wrote her celebrated 'Letters' to Pope, Addison, and other well-known people. Apart from this she wrote 'Town Eclogues' and some essays. She was one of the most brilliant, and certainly the most unconventional, women of her epoch.

6. A New System of Philosophy, Founded on the Universal Operations of Nature. By James Ussher [Archbishop of Armagh].

James Ussher [1580-1656]. Born at Dublin, where his father was an official in the Court of Chancery. Educated at Trinity College in that city. Took orders. At the age of twenty-seven was appointed to the Chair of Divinity in the Irish University and shortly afterwards Chancellor of St. Patrick's Cathedral. James I. appointed him Bishop of Meath, and four years later he was raised to the primacy of Ireland as Archbishop of Armagh. He espoused Strafford's cause and was with him to the end. During the Irish Rebellion of 1641 Ussher's house was plundered and the rest of his long life was spent in England, the closing part of it at Reigate under the roof of the Countess of Peterborough. Ussher's learning was profound, and his skill in controversy remarkable. He did not live to publish the grandest of his books, 'Bibliotheca Theologica,' an epitome of the writings of the Fathers of the Church.

7. Eleven Letters from the late Rev. M<sup>r</sup> Hervey to the Rev. M<sup>r</sup> John Wesley: Containing an Answer to that Gentleman's Remarks on Theron and Aspasio. . . .

The Rev. John Wesley (1703-1791). Founder of the great religious communion which perpetuates his name, and the pioneer with George Whitefield of the Evangelical revival of the Georgian era. Educated at the Charterhouse and Christ Church, Oxford. Took Orders in 1725, and in the following year was elected a Fellow of Lincoln, where he became the leader of a small group of graduates and undergraduates who met together for the study of the Greek Testament and religious fellowship. They were the object of much ridicule, and were dubbed 'The Holy Club,' 'Bible Bigots,' and the like, but the nickname which stuck was that of 'Methodists,' a name which John and Charles Wesley were destined to make both famous and honourable. It was in 1735 that Wesley, by this time a distinguished Oxford tutor, accepted an invitation to the colony of Georgia to preach to the Indians, and this was the beginning of the Evangelistic labours in which with such memorable results the rest of his life was spent.

The Rev. James Hervey (1714-1758), was one of John Wesley's pupils at Lincoln College, Oxford, and also one of the little band of 'Methodists' in the University. He took Orders, and, unlike Wesley, became a strong Calvinist, and died Rector of Weston Favell. He wrote the now almost forgotten but once widely popular 'Meditations amongst the Tombs,' as well as 'Theron and Aspasio' a series of dialogues and letters on theological problems, besides sermons. Wesley was much annoyed at the publication of these letters, which appeared seven years after Mr. Hervey's death and hastened the controversy which presently broke forth between the Calvinists and Arminians.

I. Observations on a Pamphlet, entitled, Thoughts on the Cause of the Present Discontents. By Catharine Macaulay. Fifth edition.

Catharine Macaulay (1733-1791). This lady, the wife of a physician, wrote several political pamphlets and letters on Education, but was chiefly known—though now almost entirely forgotten—by her 'History of England from the Accession of James II. to that of the Brunswick Line' (1763-1783), eight volumes. She also began a 'History of England from the Revolution to the Present Time' (1778), but of this only one volume appeared. James Wilson Croker declared that Catharine Macaulay, though quite neglected at the time when he wrote, made quite as much noise in her day as Thomas Macaulay did early in Queen Victoria's reign.

3. Genuine Copies of all the Letters which passed between the Rt. Hon. the Lord

Chancellor and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, and between the Sheriffs and the Secretary of State relative to the Execution of Doyle and Valine. [Spitalfields Riots.]

Between the years 1767 and 1770 the Spitalfields weavers were accustomed to parade the streets disguised and armed, breaking into the shops and destroying the looms of men who refused to strike. The weavers were responsible for immense social disorder during the Wilkes Riots, and many were killed in conflicts with the military. The loom-breaking still went on, and a law was passed making the offence capital. This was met by the destruction of a hundred and fifty looms in two nights. The ringleaders were hanged under the new law, but one of the chief witnesses against them was seized by the mob and in full daylight stoned to death in one of the fields near Bethnal Green.

1. The Present State of the British Interest in India: with a Plan for Establishing a Regular System of Government in that Country.

2. The Right, Interest, and Duty of the State as concerned in the Affairs of the East Indies. By Thomas Pownall Esq.

Thomas Pownall (1722-1805). Governor of Massachusetts 1756, a position which, after a few years, he exchanged for that of South Carolina. He returned to England in 1761, sat for some years in the House of Commons, and was made Director of the Control Office. The closing years of his life were spent in literary retirement at Bath. He had the courage to protest against the war with the North American Colonies, and his knowledge gave weight to his strictures. One of his books, 'The Administration of the Colonies,' first published in 1764, attracted wide attention and ran through many editions. 'The Letters of Junius' were in some quarters attributed to him.

4. A Defence of the Considerations on the Propriety of requiring a Subscription to Articles of Faith. [By M<sup>r</sup> Paley.]

William Paley, D.D. (1743-1805). Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge. Senior Wrangler at that University. Took Orders. Elected Fellow of his College and afterwards one of its tutors. After holding clerical preferments, became Archdeacon of Carlisle, Prebendary of St. Paul's, and Rector of Bishop Wearmouth, Durham. His chief works were 'The Principles of Moral and Political Philosophy' (1785), 'Horæ Paulinæ' (1790), and 'A View of the Evidences of Christianity' (1794). It has been said of him that he is the pre-eminent representative in popular theology of Utilitarianism, a statement which fairly well defines his position, and at the same time reveals his limitations.

VOLUME DVIII

I. A Letter to Edmund Burke Esq.
 . . . in answer to his Printed Speech said to be spoken in the House of Commons 22
 March 1775. By Josiah Tucker, D.D.

Edmund Burke (1730-1797). Educated at Trinity College, Dublin. Called to the Bar, Middle Temple, 1747. Projected the 'Annual Register' in 1758, and for some time practically wrote the whole of it. Afterwards became Private Secretary to the Marquis of Rockingham, and in 1765 entered the House of Commons as member for Wendover. Very quickly distinguished himself by his speeches on the North American Colonies, Catholic Emancipation, and fiscal reform. In 1782 he was given the post of Paymaster of the Forces and raised to the rank of a Privy Councillor. His impeachment of Warren Hastings in 1786 brought Burke prominently to the front, and in the trial which followed Burke won his greatest oratorical laurels. The closing years of his life were clouded by unworthy fears of the outcome of the French Revolution, and so impassioned was his invective that it led to a quarrel between himself and Fox. In 1795 he retired from Parliament, and the last three years of his life were spent in literary retirement. His chief writings are 'Thoughts on the Present Discontents' (1770); 'Reflections on the French Revolution' (1790); and 'Letters on a Regicide Peace' (1796). Burke brought to the interpretation of the practical issues of politics a philosophic mind, the resources of a student, the gift of historic imagination, and the magic of oratory.

Josiah Tucker, D.D. (1711-1799). Educated at St John's College, Oxford. Took Orders, and eventually became Dean of Gloucester. He is chiefly remembered by his tracts on political economy, and on his advocacy of an amicable surrender of the North American Colonies.

2. Speech of Edmund Burke Esq. on American Taxation, April 19, 1774. Third edition.

3. The Principles of a Real Whig: contained in a Preface to the Famous Hottoman's Franco-Gallia, by the late Lord Molesworth . . . [With Resolutions of the London Association.]

5. The Orthodox Dissenting-Minister's Reasons for a farther Application to Parliament for Relief in the matter of Subscription. . . . Second edition.

6. A Letter to the Rev. Mr John

Wesley, occasioned by his Calm Address to the American Colonies. By Caleb Evans M.A.

Caleb Evans, D.D. (1737-1791). Nonconformist minister, who by voice and pen fearlessly asserted the rights of the North American Colonists.

7. Letters between the Rev. D<sup>r</sup> James Fordyce and the Rev. M<sup>r</sup> Thomas Toller : to which is annexed a Concise Account of some Subsequent Transactions.

James Fordyce, D.D. (1720-1796). Educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen. Nonconformist minister, London, and brother of the eminent surgeon Sir William Fordyce.

Thomas Toller (1756-1821), Minister of the Independent Church, Kettering, Northamptonshire. During a ministry of nearly half a century, Toller won an extraordinary spiritual ascendancy over the town in which he lived, and his sermons elsewhere on special occasions—Robert Hall being witness—reached a height of moral fervour and religious persuasiveness that has seldom been equalled. He was a man of high intellectual attainments and great force of character. His 'Discourses' were published in 1824, with a biographical introduction from the pen of Robert Hall, of Leicester.

8. A Description of a Chart of Biography : with a Catalogue of all the Names inserted in it, and the Dates annexed to them. By Joseph Priestley LL.D. Fifth edition.

I. Observations on the Nature of Civil Liberty, the Principles of Government, and the Justice and Policy of the War with America. . . . By Richard Price, D.D., F.R.S. 6th edition.

Richard Price, D.D. (1723-1791). Minister of a Presbyterian Church at Hackney, London. A metaphysician, a moralist, a financier, and a master of calculation, which comes out curiously in some of his theological disquisitions. Price also took up with characteristic energy the study of politics. He boldly took the part of America in the War of Independence, and it was in reply to a sermon of his, preached on November 4, 1789, on 'The Love of Our Country,' that Edmund Burke wrote the following year his celebrated 'Reflections on the Revolution in France.' The present pamphlet on 'Civil Liberty' and one entitled 'Observations on Civil Government' brought Price the degree of D.D. from the University of Glasgow, and the thanks of the Corporation in a gold box.

1. The Rights of Great Britain Asserted against the Claims of America : being an Answer to the Declaration of the General Congress. 8th edition. To which is now added a Refutation of D<sup>r</sup> Price's State of the National Debt.

2. Political Tracts : The False Alarm, Falkland's Islands, The Patriot, and Taxation no Tyranny. By D<sup>r</sup> Johnson.

Samuel Johnson, LL.D. (1709-1784). The hero-worship of Boswell has made known to everyone, through the pages of a classic biography, not merely the facts of Dr. Johnson's strenuous intellectual life, but his noble and generous characteristics as a man. Moreover, many other aids to the interpretation of his great creative force in English society and letters have since appeared. It is said that Dr. Johnson wrote the 'False Alarm' between eight o'clock on one evening and midnight of the next. It ran through three editions in less than two months. 'The Patriot' was written at a white heat in one day. 'Taxation no Tyranny' was, according to Boswell, written at the desire of those in power, and for the 'Falkland's Islands' materials were furnished by the Ministry.

3. Remarks on the Two Last Chapters of M<sup>r</sup> Gibbon's History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, in a Letter to a Friend.

Edward Gibbon (1737-1794). Educated at Westminster School, from which he passed for a short time to Magdalen College, Oxford, but at sixteen was sent to Lausanne, where he spent five years in study. In his youth, Gibbon professed himself a convert to Roman Catholicism, but afterwards he 'suspended his religious inquiries' and adopted to a large extent the attitude of Bolingbroke in regard to problems of theology and morals. It was in 1763, whilst on a visit to Italy, that he formed the ambition of writing his history of 'The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire,' the first volume of which was published in 1776 and the last in 1788. He sat for some years in Parliament, but lived much abroad, and, when in this country, chiefly at Sheffield Park, the seat of his lifelong friend, John Holroyd, first Earl of Sheffield. His 'History,' when all reservations are made, remains one of the greatest literary achievements of the eighteenth century.

VOLUME DXIII

I. A Short Scriptural Explication of the Faith and Doctrine of the Church of England. . . . Abstracted from a Commentary by Thomas Rogers B.A. By J. W.

Thomas Rogers was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and was Rector of Horringer, Suffolk, in the reign of James I. He was Chaplain to Archbishop Bancroft when the latter held the See of London. The Commentary referred to is 'The Faith, Doctrine, and Religion professed and protected in the Realm of England, expressed in Thirty-nine Articles.' It was first published in 1586. Rogers also wrote 'The English Creede,' and was one of the earliest translators of the 'De Imitatione Christi.'

2. A Letter to Soame Jenyns Esq., wherein the Futility and Absurdity of Some Part of his Reasoning in his View of the Internal Evidence of the Christian Religion is set forth and exposed. 2nd edition.

Soame Jenyns (1704-1787). Educated at St. John's, Cambridge. Entered the House of Commons as member for that county in 1742. One of the Commissioners of the Board of Trade. Was a writer of verse, and dabbled with his pen in political and economic discussions. His chief books are 'A Free Enquiry into the Nature and Origin of Evil' (1757), and 'View of the Internal Evidence of Christianity' (1776). The latter, though quite forgotten, ran through ten editions, and has been more than once translated.

3. The Advantages and Disadvantages of the Marriage-State, as entered into with Religious or Irreligious Persons : Represented under the Similitude of a Dream. 10th edition. . .

4. Letters of the late Rev. M<sup>r</sup> Lawrence Sterne, to his most intimate Friends. With a Fragment in the manner of Rabelais. To which are prefixed Memoirs of his Life and Family. Written by Himself. (3 vols. in 1). 296 pp.

Lawrence Sterne, M.A. (1713-1768). Educated at Jesus College, Cambridge. Took Orders (1738), and was given the Vicarage of Sutton, near York, and afterwards the neighbouring living of Stillington and a prebendal stall in York Minster. To these appointments was afterwards added the curacy of Coxwold. In 1759 Sterne wrote the first two volumes of 'Tristram Shandy.' The ninth and final volume appeared in 1767. In the interval he published three volumes of sermons, and travelled widely on the Continent, and the outcome of his wanderings was the 'Sentimental Journey,' which appeared in 1768, the year of his death. These 'Letters' were published by his daughter. Carlyle was inclined to think that Sterne, in spite of all his failings and foibles, was almost entitled to rank as a younger though less gifted brother of Cervantes, whilst Thackeray refused to regard him as a great humorist, and somewhat curtly dismissed him as merely a great jester.

1. An Essay on Conduct and Education. Recommended to the People called Quakers. By John Fry. 3rd edition.

2. War with the Devil: or, The Young Man's Conflict with the Powers of Darkness. In a Dialogue. . . . With a Dialogue between an Old Apostate and a Professor. Twenty-second edition. (Illustrated.) By B. Keach.

Benjamin Keach (1640-1704). Baptist minister. In the reign of Charles II. Keach was arrested in Buckinghamshire as an unlicensed preacher, and was afterwards tried at Aylesbury on the false charge of being a Fifth Monarchy Man. He afterwards, 1668, became pastor of a Baptist Church in Southwark—the forerunner of the Metropolitan Tabernacle which C. H. Spurgeon's ministry has made memorable in the annals of English Non-conformity. He was a self-taught, but well-read man. He wrote a collection of hymns. Chiefly remembered by his 'Tropologia' (1682), an exposition of the metaphors of Scripture; and 'Gospel Mysteries Unveiled' (1701), aids to the interpretation of the Parables.

1. An Earnest Invitation to the Friends of the Established Church to join with several of their Brethren, Clergy, and Laity, in setting apart one Hour of every Week for Prayer and Supplication during the Present troublesome Times. [By Rev. Wm. Romaine.]

William Romaine (1714-1795). Educated at Christ Church, Oxford. Took Orders, and after holding other appointments, such as Lecturer at St. Botolph's, Billingsgate, Morning Preacher at St. George's, Hanover Square, was appointed Rector of St. Andrew Wardrobe and St. Ann, Blackfriars, a position which he held until his death. He held for some time the Chair of Astronomy in Gresham College, and was one of the most popular Evangelical preachers in London and a great friend of the Countess of Huntingdon, in whose house he often preached to rich and poor. His chief book is 'The Life of Faith' (1763), but he wrote several other devotional works and practical commentaries.

2. Considerations on the Propriety of Protestant Dissenting Ministers' Acceding to a Declaration of their Belief in the Holy Scriptures. . . .

3. A Plan of Lectures on the Principles of Nonconformity for the Instruction of Catechumens. By R. Robinson. Third edition.

Robert Robinson (1735-1790). Baptist minister at Cambridge. Author of 'A Plea for the Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ' (1776), 'A Political Catechism' (1782), 'Ecclesiastical Researches' (1792), and other works. These Lectures on Nonconformity ran through many editions, and were cited in the House of Commons both by Burke and Fox.

2. Tracts Concerning the Ancient and only Legal Means of National Defence by a Free Militia. By Granville Sharp. (141 pp.)

Granville Sharp (1734-1813). Philanthropist. Held an appointment in the Ordnance Department, which he relinquished because of conscientious scruples at the outbreak of the war with the American Colonies, and gave himself entirely to scholarly research and active philanthropy. He founded the Society for the Abolition of the Slave Trade, was one of the founders of the Bible Society, made a bold protest against the practice of duelling, and was a zealous advocate of parliamentary reform. He was, moreover, a distinguished Greek and Hebrew scholar.

3. A Collection of Treaties of Peace, Commerce, and Alliance between Great Britain and other Powers from the year 1619 to 1734. [Also a Discourse by the Rt. Hon. C. Jenkinson on the Conduct of Britain respecting neutral nations.] (156 pp.)

Charles Jenkinson, first Earl of Liverpool (1729-1808). Educated at Charterhouse and University College, Oxford. Entered Parliament for Cocker-mouth, 1761. Secretary of the Treasury, 1763. Secretary at War, 1778. President of the Board of Trade (1784) under Pitt. Was created first Baron Hawkesbury and towards the close of his life Earl of Liverpool. One of the most influential statesmen of the period on all questions of finance and commerce.

I. A View of the English Constitution.
By the late Baron De Montesquieu. . . .

Charles de Secondat, Baron de Montesquieu (1689-1755). On the publication of his 'Lettres Per-sanes' in 1721, Montesquieu found himself famous, for the book held the mirror up to the institutions as well as the manners of France with philosophic vigour and satirical piquancy. It was, undoubtedly, from this book that Oliver Goldsmith borrowed the idea of his 'Citizen of the World.' Montesquieu, who in a scholarly sense was splendidly equipped, travelled widely and spent two years in England (1729-1731), investigating the principles of the English Constitution and studying the political writings of Locke. He published his great work concerning the spirit of laws in 1748, and this pamphlet contains his conclusions on the Constitutional Government of England.

John Newton (1725-1807). Engaged at one time in the slave trade, Newton became in 1764 a clergyman of the Church of England at Olney, where he gained a remarkable religious ascendancy over Cowper the poet. He remained there fifteen years, and wrote in conjunction with Cowper the Olney Hymns. In 1779 he became Rector of St. Mary Woolnoth, London, and in that position was one of the leaders of the Evangelical party.

I. The Letters of Junius. In one vol. New edition. (393 pp.)

Sir Philip Francis, M.P. (1740-1818), is commonly supposed to be the author of the 'Letters of Junius.' In early life he was in the diplomatic service in Portugal, and afterwards became a Member of the Council of Bengal, where he was a fierce opponent of the policy of Warren Hastings, in whose impeachment he afterwards took a prominent part. If 'Junius' was Sir Philip Francis, he was in his twenty-sixth year when he wrote his first known letter to the 'Public Advertiser,' which was the most influential of the daily papers published at this time, and which was to acquire much fresh influence through his contributions. That letter, dated April 28, 1767, was signed 'Poplicola,' one of the many pseudonyms that this writer adopted before he decided that he would be known to his contemporaries and posterity as 'Junius.' The last of the series appeared in 1772.

17th February and 21st Feby 1783, on the Articles of Peace. (116 pp.)

2. A Letter to the Rt. Hon. Charles James Fox. By Major John Scott. [East India Company.]

Charles James Fox, M.P. (1749-1806). Educated at Eton and Oxford, and by foreign travel, and entered the House of Commons for Midhurst as a supporter of Lord North in 1768. During the whole of the American War Fox was in opposition to the Ministry, and on the fall of Lord North entered the Rockingham Ministry (1782) as Secretary of State. On Shelburne's accession to power both Fox and Pitt resigned, but in the Portland Ministry which quickly followed he became Foreign Secretary. The Coalition Ministry was wrecked on Fox's Indian Bill, and Pitt came into power (1784) for the rest of the century. On the death of his great rival in 1806, Fox became Foreign Secretary in the Grenville Ministry, and at once opened negotiations for peace with France. Before, however, the failure of his plans became evident, he died at the age of fifty-six. He was, in spite of personal foibles, full of the enthusiasm of humanity, as his labours for the abolition of the slave trade attest, and he was, moreover, a bold and impassioned advocate of civil and religious liberty.

By J. S.

5. A Ministerial Almanack : addressed to the Rt. Hon. Lord Thurlow. [On the Patronage of the East India Company.] By Recos Jepphi.

Edward Lord Thurlow (1732-1806). Educated Caius College, Cambridge, and called to the Bar at the Inner Temple. Entered Parliament, 1768, for Tamworth as a Tory, and in the following year was appointed Solicitor-General, in 1771 Attorney-General, and in 1778 Lord Chancellor. He was a bitter reactionary and exasperated the people by his contemptuous strictures in the political agitation over Wilkes, in the controversy over the 'Letters of Junius,' and during the American War. He was brusque, defiant, clever and somewhat unscrupulous, and cynically boasted, in spite of his attempts to browbeat public opinion, that he knew very little of statesmanship.

1. A Letter to the First Belfast Company of Volunteers, in the Province of Ulster. By a Member of the British Parliament.

2. A Defence of the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shelburne from the Reproaches of his Numerous Enemies; in a Letter to Sir George Saville, Bart. . . .

William Petty, Marquis of Lansdowne (1737-1805).

In early life he served in the Army, and was present at the battle of Minden. At the accession of George III. was appointed aide-de-camp to the King, and in 1761, after representing the pocket borough of Wycombe for a few weeks, was called to the peerage as Earl Shelburne by the death of his father. He attached himself to the Bute Ministry, and in 1763 was appointed President of the Board of Trade, but he presently went over to Pitt and was in opposition all through Lord North's Ministry, but became Secretary of State in the Rockingham Cabinet in 1782. On the unexpected death of Rockingham in that year, Shelburne became Prime Minister, but was quickly turned out of office by the coalition of North and Fox. In 1784 he was created Marquis of Lansdowne, and for some years quitted active politics, but reappeared for a time when the French Revolution hotly divided political opinion in England. Sir George Cornwall Lewis is responsible for the assertion that Lansdowne was the first British statesman to comprehend and advocate the principles of Free Trade.

Sir George Saville, M.P. (1721-1784). The representative of an old Yorkshire family, who was returned at five successive elections for his native county. Although Saville spoke little in Parliament, his integrity, courage, and common-sense commanded universal respect. He resisted at every stage the war with the American Colonies, as well as the prosecution of Wilkes, and on all questions which touched liberty, whether civil or religious, he was a bold and uncompromising Whig.

The 'Rolliad' was a series of political satires, the first of which appeared in a London journal in 1784, and took the shape of a humorous criticism of Colonel Rolle, M.P., afterwards Lord Rolle. One of the best of the series was a pretended review of an imaginary epic poem. Marquis of Grantham, one of the Lords of the Treasury, and afterwards third Duke of Montrose, was one of the persons attacked in the 'Rolliad.'

1. A Summary Explanation of the Principles of Mr Pitt's Intended Bill for Amending the Representation of the People in Parliament. By the Rev. Christopher Wyvill.

Christopher Wyvill, LL.D. (1740-1822). Educated at Cambridge; Rector of Black Notley, Essex. Wrote various political pamphlets on parliamentary reform, and also a treatise: 'Intolerance the Disgrace of Christians, not the Fault of their Religion' (1809).

2. The Crisis: or, A Defence of Administration against the Imaginary Victory and Ill-Founded Triumph of Opposition. Second edition.

3. Character of the late Lord Viscount Sackville. [By Richard Cumberland.]

George Viscount Sackville (1716-1785). Third son of the first Duke of Dorset. Educated at Westminster and Trinity College, Dublin. Entered the army and won distinction at the battles of Dettingen and Fontenoy. Rose to the rank of Lieutenant-General, but was court-martialled after the battle of Minden and dismissed the service. Under Lord Bute, Sackville was appointed (1775) Colonial Secretary of State, an office which he held during the American War. 'Letters of Junius' were sometimes attributed to him.

Richard Cumberland (1732-1811). Dramatist. Educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge. Secretary to Lord Halifax when the latter was Viceroy of Ireland. In 1775 was appointed Secretary of the Board of Trade. He published several novels and a collection of essays, but is chiefly remembered by his play, 'The West Indian,' and by subsequent dramas.

4. A Dissertation on Certain Memorable Occurrences in the History of Scotland, read before the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland 5 April 1785.

2. An Estimate of the Comparative Strength of Great Britain during the present and four preceding Reigns, and of the Losses of her Trade from every War since the Revolution. By George Chalmers. (238 pp.)

George Chalmers (1742-1825). Educated at King's College, Aberdeen. Emigrated, after some legal training, to Maryland, and practised in the colonial courts. He was opposed to the War of Independence, and therefore returned to England at the commencement of the struggle, where in recognition of his loyalty he received (1786) an appointment at the Board of Trade, a position which he held for the rest of his life. The present book, according to J. R. McCulloch, the eminent statistician, was written to dispel the gloomy apprehensions of those who supposed that England was ruined in a commercial sense by her unsuccessful struggle in the North American Colonies. He published other books, notably a collection of Treaties between Great Britain and other Powers, as well as a biography of Sir David Lindsay, to which was attached a glossary of his poetical works.

3. An Essay on the Slavery and Commerce of the Human Species. . . . By Thomas Clarkson. (256 pp.)

Thomas Clarkson (1760-1846). Educated at St. Paul's School and St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1785 he won the Latin Essay at the University, the subject being, 'Is it lawful to make men slaves against their will?' This gave the keynote to his life, and he became the open champion of the abolition of the Slave Trade. Many of the leading Whigs, notably Pitt, assisted the movement. Clarkson found, however, his most distinguished convert in William Wilberforce, who became the parliamentary spokesman of the new philanthropy. After years of strenuous agitation Clarkson and Wilberforce had the satisfaction in 1807 of seeing the resolutions in favour of the Abolition of the Slave Trade proposed by Fox and Grenville, and carried. In the following year Clarkson wrote his 'History of the Abolition of the Slave Trade.'

VOLUME DXXXIII

I. The Present State of the East Indies.
By Warren Hastings.

Warren Hastings (1733-1818). First Governor-General of British India. Educated at Westminster School, and at the age of seventeen went to India in the service of the East India Company. He distinguished himself by devotion to work and by skill as a linguist, and after fourteen years returned to England, but in 1769 was sent to Madras as a Member of the Council, and after two years was transferred to Calcutta as President of the Supreme Council. When an Act of Parliament was passed altering the Constitution of British India, Hastings became Governor-General. Sir William Hunter asserts that if Clive laid the territorial foundations of the British Empire in India, it was Warren Hastings who created a British Administration in the East. 'He reorganised the Indian Service, reformed every branch of the Revenue Collections, created Courts of Justice and laid the basis of a police system. But history remembers his name not for his improvements in the internal administration, but for his bold foreign policy in dealing with the Native States.' It was in regard to the latter that Warren Hastings was impeached on his return to England in 1786. He was charged with extortion, oppression, and all sorts of political injustice, and the trial—it made Burke famous—lasted for seven years (1788-1795), and ended with a triumphant acquittal. The cost of his defence, 70,000*l.*, ruined Hastings, but the East India Company came to his relief with a pension of 4,000*l.* a year. Hastings lived to witness the vindication of his policy.

5. Letters to the Jews; inviting them to an Amicable Discussion of the Evidences of Christianity. By Joseph Priestley, LL.D.; F.R.S. (In Two Parts).

Joseph Priestley, LL.D. (1733-1804). Entered the Unitarian Ministry at Needham Market, Suffolk, 1755. Minister of Nantwich, Cheshire, 1758, and in 1761 appointed to a Chair in the Dissenting Academy in Warrington. Whilst in this capacity wrote his first scientific work, 'The History and Present State of Electricity,' which resulted in his election into the Royal Society and brought him the LL.D. of Edinburgh. In 1767, whilst minister at Mill Hill, near Leeds, he made scientific discoveries for which he received the Copley medal of the Royal Society. In 1773 he was appointed Librarian to the Earl of Melbourne, and in 1780 resumed his ministry at Birmingham, where his sympathy with the French Revolution led to riots in the summer of 1791. The mob set fire to his house, and his library and scientific apparatus were destroyed. He removed in the same year to Hackney as minister of a congregation there, but in 1794 emigrated to America, and died in Pennsylvania at the age of seventy-one. He wrote upwards of seventy volumes on theological, philosophic, and scientific subjects.

1. A Letter to a Friend on the Reported Marriage of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. By M<sup>r</sup> Horne Tooke.

John Horne Tooke (1736-1812). Educated at Westminster, Eton, and St. John's College, Cambridge. Took Orders under strong family pressure, but shortly afterwards attempted to qualify as a barrister, but was unable because of his Orders. Became an active politician and for a time worked hand and glove with Wilkes, with whom, however, he eventually quarrelled, and was then hotly attacked by 'Junius.' He was a bold opponent of the war with the American colonists, and was sentenced to a year's imprisonment as well as the payment of a fine for an alleged libel on the King's soldiers in America. He was also imprisoned during the agitation which followed the French Revolution. In 1801 was returned to Parliament, but only sat for a single session, in consequence of the bill becoming law which rendered clerics ineligible as members of the House of Commons. He is best remembered by his 'Diversions of Purley'—a clever though now antiquated work on philology.

I. Speech of Lord Grenville on the Proposed Regency.

William Windham, Lord Grenville (1759-1834). Educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford. Entered Parliament 1782, and two years later succeeded Burke as Paymaster-General. Held the office of Speaker for four months in 1789, but was then appointed Home Secretary under Pitt. Raised to the Peerage in 1790, and held the Foreign Office from 1791 until Pitt's resignation in 1801. He was an uncompromising advocate of the Catholic claims, and during Pitt's last Ministry (1804-5) was in opposition because of this question. On Pitt's death, January 23, 1806, Grenville and Fox joined forces in the brilliant but short-lived Administration of 'All the Talents.' It was wrecked over the Catholic question, and Grenville was in opposition for the rest of his life. He was twice asked to take office again, but in both cases insisted on Catholic Emancipation being made a Cabinet question—a movement which neither the Perceval nor Liverpool Administrations were willing to adopt.

The State of Prisons and Hospitals in Holland, Germany, Italy, Genoa, Switzerland, Austrian Flanders, French Flanders, and France ; Scotland and Ireland ; with a particular Account of the English Prisons. . . . (144 pp.)

John Howard (1726-1790). On a voyage to Lisbon in 1756—to view the effects of the earthquake—Howard was taken captive by a French privateer, and so gained his first experience of imprisonment in France. In 1773 he made inquiries into the condition of English jails, and afterwards went far and wide on the Continent studying the methods adopted in various lands in dealing with criminals. In 1777 he published 'The State of the Prisons in England and Wales,' and this was followed by 'An Account of the Principal Lazarettos in Europe.' He died in Russia in the midst of his philanthropic labours. His investigations and exposures led to vast and beneficial changes in prison management.

I. Substance of Observations on the State of the Public Finances of Great Britain, by Lord Rawdon. . . .

Francis Rawdon, Marquis of Hastings (1754-1825). Adjutant-General of the British forces during the American War. Became Earl of Moira in 1793, and in the following year served in Holland with distinction. In 1812 was appointed Governor-General of British India, a position which he held for ten years. It was said of him that he completed Lord Wellesley's conquests in India, and left the Bombay Presidency almost as it stands at present. He was created Marquis of Hastings in 1816. Ill-health compelled him to relinquish his great position in the East, and in 1824 he was appointed Governor of Malta, a post which he only lived to hold for a few months.

military service of Portugal, and received a captain's commission. After the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle came to England, and was for seven years tutor in a Shropshire family. Here he came under the influence of the Methodists, and through the personal influence of John Wesley was ordained by the Bishop of Hereford (1756-1757), and three years later was appointed to the living of Madeley, Salop, where he laboured with singular devotion for a quarter of a century. In 1768 he became President of Lady Huntingdon's College at Trevecca, Wales—the forerunner of Cheshunt College, Herts, a position which he held until 1771, when he resigned because of the Calvinistic controversy. Wesley tried in vain to draw Fletcher of Madeley from his obscure parish, and even proposed that he should be his own successor in the direction of the newly constituted Methodist churches. Fletcher's physical health was precarious, and he shrank from so great a task, and his closing years were spent in his own parish, and were marked with a zeal which nothing seemed to tire.

I. Letter to the Addressers on the Late Proclamation. By Thomas Paine.

Thomas Paine (1737-1809). His career began at Lewes, Sussex, as an exciseman. He wrote a clever pamphlet, and on the strength of it obtained an introduction to Benjamin Franklin, who urged him to cross the Atlantic and adopt a literary career in the Colonies. He settled in Philadelphia in 1774, and became editor of the 'Pennsylvania Gazette.' Next year he published his famous but bitter pamphlet 'Common Sense,' in which he made a violent attack on the English Constitution, and exhorted the Colonists to resistance. During the American War Paine wrote a series of impassioned appeals, and received a money vote from Pennsylvania, and a grant of land from the State of New York, as well as an official appointment. He returned to Europe in 1787, and in 1792 published his 'Rights of Man' in answer to Burke's 'Reflections on the Revolution.' It was condemned as a 'false, scandalous, malicious libel,' and Paine was tried in consequence in the Court of King's Bench and condemned, in spite of Erskine's impassioned defence. He managed to escape to France, and was chosen Member of the National Convention for Calais, but he subsequently offended the Jacobins by advocating clemency to Louis XVI., and was thrown into prison by Robespierre, but regained his liberty on the fall of the Dictator. In 1795 he published his 'Age of Reason,' and in the following year 'Agrarian Justice.' He lived in France till 1802, but his friend Thomas Jefferson having been elected third President of the United States, he returned to America in October 1802. He published his final instalment of 'The Age of Reason' in 1807, a coarse and bitter attack on Christian theology. There can be little doubt that Paine's 'Common Sense' had much to do with making the Declaration of Independence possible to the Colonists. His influence steadily declined in his later years, and this was largely due to personal character on the one hand and the increasing virulence of his attitude towards religion on the other.

7. The Rights of Juries Defended. Together with Authorities of Law in support of those Rights, and the Objections to M<sup>r</sup> Fox's Libel Bill Refuted. By Charles Earl Stanhope. (164 pp.)

Charles Earl Stanhope (1753-1816). Educated at Eton and Geneva. Entered the House of Commons for High Wycombe, for which he sat until 1786, when he succeeded his father in the Peerage. He was an open Republican, and lost his influence in the House of Lords by enthusiastic approval of the French Revolution. He was a clever man of science, and amongst other inventions contrived an arithmetical machine, a monochord for tuning musical instruments, and a new printing-press. His extreme views often left him in a minority of one in the House of Commons.

2. Declaration of the Friends of the Liberty of the Press; assembled at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, January 19, 1793. By the Hon. Thomas Erskine. Second edition.

Thomas Lord Erskine (1750-1823). Educated at Edinburgh High School, and St. Andrew's University, and after some years, spent first in the Navy and then in the Army, entered Trinity College, Cambridge, and then studied at Lincoln's Inn and was called to the Bar in 1778. Was elected M.P. for Portsmouth (1783), and sat for that borough until 1806, when he was created a peer and made Lord Chancellor. Meanwhile he made a great forensic reputation by his defence successively of Admiral Keppel, Lord George Gordon, Thomas Paine, and Horne Tooke. Erskine had the courage to break with the Prince Regent, whose friendship he had long enjoyed, because of the latter's treatment of Queen Caroline, whom he always regarded as a greatly injured woman.

I. An Apology for the Freedom of the Press, and for General Liberty. To which are prefixed Remarks on Bishop Horsley's Sermon, preached on the 30 January last. By Robert Hall, A.M.

Samuel Horsley D.D. (1733-1806). Editor of Sir Isaac Newton's works. Fellow of the Royal Society and Bishop of St. Asaph. Was in his day the most eloquent preacher in the Church of England. Dr. Houghton describes a remarkable scene on the occasion of Horsley's preaching a sermon on January 30, 1793 (King Charles the Martyr), nine days after the death of Louis XVI., in which, after an impassioned description of the scenes through which that hapless King had passed, he went on to say that his own country had set the frightful example, and the whole congregation sprang to their feet in uncontrollable emotion. ('Dictionary of Religion,' edited by the Rev. William Benham, B.D. London, 1891.)

Robert Hall (1764-1831). Eminent Baptist Minister. Entered the Baptist Academy at Bristol at the age of fifteen, and in 1781 proceeded to King's College, Aberdeen, where he formed one of the most influential friendships of his life, with a fellow student, Sir James Mackintosh. In 1785 he became colleague to Dr. Caleb Evans in the Baptist Ministry at Bristol, and classical tutor in his old academy. Here he attained great renown by his power in the pulpit, but in the course of a few years his ministry was eclipsed by ominous symptoms of mental derangement. After a period of strict seclusion Hall recovered, and in 1791 was chosen pastor, in succession to the celebrated Robert Robinson, of the Baptist Church at Cambridge, where he remained with ever widening reputation in the pulpit for fifteen years. In 1804 he was compelled to resign by a return in an acute form of his old malady, and on his recovery, in 1807, became Baptist minister at Leicester, where he remained till 1826, when he was chosen President of the Bristol Academy and Minister of Broadmead Chapel in that city, a post which he held until his death. It was the union of imagination and intellect with moral courage, intense fervour, and majesty of expression which gave Robert Hall unique ascendancy in the pulpit.

He afterwards held a similar position at Hackney College, London, but as he wrote a Tract which advocated private rather than public worship, he was compelled to resign. In 1798 he wrote a pamphlet against the war with France, which landed him in an action for libel and two years' imprisonment in Dorchester Gaol, his family meanwhile being supported by public subscription. He afterwards gave a course of classical lectures in London, but died in the year of his release from prison. 1796

1. Facts addressed to the Serious Attention of the People of Great Britain respecting the Expence of the War, and the State of the National Debt. By William Morgan F.R.S.

William Morgan (1750-1833). Was for more than half a century an official of the Equitable Assurance Company, London, and wrote on various economic problems.

2. Pax in Bello: or, A Few Reflexions on the Prospect of Peace, arising out of the Present Circumstances of the War.

3. The Retort Politic on Master Burke: or, A Few Words en passant, occasioned by his Two Letters on a Regicide Peace, from a Tyro of his own School, but of another Class.

4. The Decline and Fall of the English System of Finance. By Thomas Paine. 3rd edition.

5. The Watchman. Nos. I. to X. By S. T. Coleridge.

Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772-1834). Poet and philosopher. Educated at Christ's Hospital and Jesus College, Cambridge. Settled at Bristol. There, in conjunction with Southey and other enthusiasts, he projected a scheme—which eventually came to nothing—for a model colony on the banks of the Susquehanna. His dream of 'Pantisocracy' over, he adopted a literary life. Married, settled at Nether Stowey, and after a visit to Germany took up his abode in the Lake District. In 1804 went to Malta and was for more than a year Secretary to the Governor, Sir A. Ball. In 1810 went to London and practically spent the rest of his life in retreat with his friend Mr. Gillman at Highgate. His literary career began with a volume of poems in 1794; this was followed by 'The Ancient Mariner,' 'Christabel,' and other poems, as well as translations from Schiller. Coleridge dabbled a good deal in journalism. He was at one time connected with the 'Morning Post' and at another with the 'Morning Chronicle.' He projected 'The Watchman,' which did not succeed, and wrote 'The Friend.' This is the whole of 'The Watchman.' It ended on May 13, 1796, on the ground that it did not pay its expenses. 'Part of my readers,' said Coleridge, 'relinquished it because it did not contain sufficient original composition, and a still larger part because it contained too much.' Amongst his later works were 'Biographia Literaria,' 'Lay Sermons,' and 'Aids to Reflection.' 'I am grieved that you never met Coleridge,' wrote Southey to Taylor of Norwich; 'all other men whom I have ever known are mere children to him, and yet all is palsied by a total want of moral strength.' His 'Confessions of an Inquiring Spirit,' 'Literary Remains,' and 'Table Talk,' were published after his death, and edited by his nephew and son-in-law Henry Nelson Coleridge, whilst his 'Essays on his Own Times' and 'Notes on Shakespeare and the Dramatists' were edited by his daughter Sara Coleridge.

Nicholas Vansittart (1766-1851). Called to the Bar in 1791, entered Parliament in 1796, and after holding other appointments succeeded Perceval as Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1812, and in 1823 was raised to the peerage as Baron Bexley.

2. An Appeal to the People of Great Britain on the Present Alarming State of the Public Finances and of Public Credit. By William Morgan F.R.S. 3rd edition.

3. A Concise and Authentic History of the Bank of England. . . . By T. Fortune. .

E. F. T. Fortune, author of 'Epitome of the Stocks and Funds,' a handbook first published in 1796, which kept its vogue for more than half a century.

4. Considerations touching the Likeliest Means to remove Hirelings out of the Church. . . . By John Milton. [Reprinted 1797.]

This tract was first published by Milton in 1659, during the brief Protectorate of Richard Cromwell. 'He was then living in a pretty garden house in Petty France, Westminster, next door to the Lord Scudamore's, and opening into St. James' Park.'

This house was standing thirty years ago as No. 19 York Street, Westminster. Oddly enough, Jeremy Bentham was its owner at the beginning of the nineteenth century, and the most distinguished of his tenants was William Hazlitt, who came to reside there in 1811. He was then thirty-four years of age, and his most intimate friend at the time was Charles Lamb.

5. The Poet's Fate ; a Poetical Dialogue.
By George Dyer. 2nd edition.

George Dyer, of Clifford's Inn (1755-1841). Educated at Christ's Hospital, and Emmanuel, Cambridge. He was an eminent classical scholar, and is said to have contributed all that was original in Valpy's edition of the Classics in one hundred and forty-one volumes. Dyer laboured at this great work from 1819 to 1830, and had scarcely finished it when his eyesight quickly failed and left him in total blindness. He was one of the founders of the Percy Society. Edited two of the plays of Euripides. Wrote a 'History of the University and Colleges of Cambridge,' and bequeathed his books and papers to the South Kensington Museum. He was a man of blameless and attractive character, and one of the closest friends of Charles Lamb. In a letter to Coleridge, August 26, 1800, Lamb says: 'Dyer is goodness itself. If I could but calculate the precise date of his death, I would write a novel on purpose to make George the hero. I could hit him off to a hair.' Alas, Elia died in 1834, and his friend survived him seven years.

7. Letter Second to the Reverend William Fletcher, author of a Late Publication, intituled, The Scripture Loyalist. . . . By William Stevens.

William Stevens (1732-1807). Chiefly remembered by his edition of the works of Jones of Leyland, whose life he also wrote. Stevens was a fine classical scholar, but his chief interest lay in Biblical criticism. He was profoundly afraid of the revolutionary effect in England of the French Revolution, and, as a matter of fact, helped to found a society to resist political innovations. He held for a term of years the post of treasurer to Queen Anne's Bounty.

I. A Modest Apology for the Roman Catholics of Great Britain : addressed to all Moderate Protestants ; particularly the Members of Both Houses of Parliament. [By the Rev. Alexander Geddes, LL.D.]

Alexander Geddes, LL.D. (1737-1802). Roman Catholic priest. Educated at the Scots College, Paris, and officiated as a priest for some years in Scotland, where he obtained the degree of Doctor of Laws, and published a translation of the Satires of Horace. In 1780 was transferred to London, where he officiated for two years, when he relinquished the priestly calling altogether. He made an original translation of the Bible, and Lord Petre allowed him a pension in order that he might give himself wholly to this task. The first volume, with critical notes, was published in 1792, and the second in 1797, but the project was not completed, because of the grave dissatisfaction of his co-religionists with the result. In spite of his learning, Geddes was to a large extent a rationalist, so much so indeed that Bishop Van Mildert describes his comments as an artful attack upon the Divine authority of the Scriptures.

SUPPLEMENTARY.

A Collection of fifty-three political and ecclesiastical Tracts by William Prynne, including 'The Sovereigne Power of Parliaments and Kingdomes,' 'A Breviate of the Prelates intolerable usurpations,' 'A New Discovery of the Prelates Tyranny,' and 'Rome's Master-Peece.' Six volumes.

The chief facts in the life of William Prynne (1600-1669) have already been stated. This collection of the militant Puritan's controversial writings, though by no means complete, contains the majority of the tracts from his pen which are of direct historical interest. The most exhaustive lists of Prynne's writings—he is believed to have printed nearly two hundred volumes and pamphlets—will be found in Antony Wood, though his statements ought to be read in the light of Bruce's notes on Prynne's career, 'Documents relating to the Proceedings against William Prynne,' published by the Camden Society in 1877, under the editorial supervision of Dr. S. R. Gardiner.

The background is a dense, intricate marbled paper pattern. It features a complex, repeating motif of small, dark, teardrop-shaped elements arranged in a grid-like fashion. Overlaid on this pattern are several large, swirling, vortex-like shapes that create a sense of motion and depth. The overall effect is a rich, textured, and visually busy background. A white, rectangular label is affixed to the center of the page, tilted slightly counter-clockwise. The label contains three lines of handwritten text in black ink.
